COMMENTS OF RESIDENTS TESTIFYING AT COLUMBUS, OHIO

TOWN HALL MEETING SUBMITTED BY FREE PRESS

On March 7, 2007 a “Town Meeting on the Future of Media” was held at the Broad Street Presbyterian Church in Columbus, Ohio. Community leaders and members of the public testified to Commissioners Copps, Adelstein, and McDowell with their intention of submitting these comments into the official record (06-121). Some participants elected to write their testimony and submit it to the FCC. Handwritten or typed testimony is hereby submitted to the FCC to be placed in docket MB Docket No. 06-121.

SUMMARY

Free Press, Consumer's Union, Common Cause, United Church of Christ Office of Communications, Metropolitan Church Council, Ohio PIRG, and Ohio Citizen Action sponsored a town meeting on the future of media in Columbus, Ohio on March 7, 2007. Nearly 400 people attended the event which took place at the Broad Street Presbyterian Church. The hearing featured opening remarks from FCC Commissioners Michael Copps, Johnathan Adelstein, and Robert McDowell, one panel, and a lengthy period for public testimony.

Anyone from the audience who wished to testify was allowed two minutes to address Commissioners Copps, Adelstein and McDowell about the media ownership rulemaking process underway at the FCC. Participants were informed that their public comments would be placed in the appropriate FCC docket and that they may hand in testimony if they did not wish to read it at the microphone. Testimony continued for nearly four hours – and comments were overwhelmingly opposed to increased media consolidation.

"I am concerned that only a few companies own most of the media," said 13-year-old Lucy Powell, a resident of Athens, Ohio. "This is my future, and I need to hear different viewpoints to know what is going on. Thank you for thinking about me and the rest of my generation as you make decisions on this important issue."

"When large companies take over local newspapers and radio and television stations, they strip the local news staff and package recycled news programming to the community, making the kind of reporting I witnessed in my early days as a social worker shallow at best and non-existent at worst," said Alvin Hadley, executive director of the Columbus Metropolitan Area Church Council.

"I am here on behalf of the men and women who care deeply about their profession — in part because they care about our democracy," said panelist Connie Schultz, a Pulitzer Prize-winning journalist. "I mourn the changes in the media industry, but I am hopeful for the first time because hearings like this are happening all across the country. You, the FCC, have a chance to make it right, and we need you to make it right in Ohio."

The Columbus event was organized by Free Press, Consumers Union, Common Cause Ohio, United Church of Christ Office of Communications, Inc., Columbus Metropolitan Area Church Council, Ohio PIRG, Ohio Citizen Action, OK-Alliance, the Ohio/Kentucky Chapter of the Alliance for Community Media, Mid-Atlantic Community Papers Association, and Media Bridges

Copies of the public testimony handed in at the event are hereby submitted to FCC Secretary Marlene H. Dortch for inclusion in the official record of MB Docket No. 06-121.

To the Honorable Members of the Federal Communications Commission:

Greetings to each of you and welcome to the great city of Columbus, Ohio

My name is Dr. Melvin V. Richardson. I am, among other things, an ordained Baptist minister associated with Shiloh Baptist Church, here in Columbus; immediate past president of the Columbus Metropolitan Area Church Council, current president of the Greater Columbus Local Religious Programming Council (GCLRPC) and host of the television program entitled, “GOOD NEWS! – A Christian Ecumenical Magazine” – which, for at least the past four years, has been broadcast on the Hallmark Channel, Channel 23, on Time Warner Cable, at 6.30 a.m. on Fridays.

The program that I host, along with three others (a Christian Science program, a Presbyterian worship service, with primarily majority participants, and, until very recently, an African American Baptist worship service), have been made possible by the provision of air time without cost by the Hallmark Channel and Time Warner. The GCLRPC operates separately from Hallmark/Time Warner with its own board of directors and is, by agreement with Hallmark/Time Warner, afforded considerable leeway in selecting the religious programs that are broadcast to the approximately 326,000 customers of Time Warner in the Ohio area.

I, in my capacity as President of GCLRPC and host of the “GOOD NEWS!” program, wish to speak positively regarding the diversity of programming we have been providing. My program has provided features on such topics as the Catholic Church’s Russian religious icons, inner city and urban ministries of numerous denominations, the religions of the Native Americans, the whirling dervishes of Turkish Islam, the role of faith in politics, the role of religious faith in business from the Christian, Jewish and Islamic perspectives, African American chord music and its history and African Christian prayer, among many others.

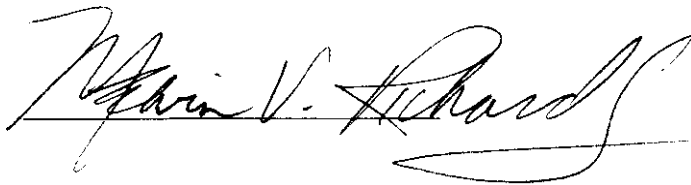

GCLRPC is in the process of selecting a replacement for the African American worship service and has a viable applicant and candidate undergoing the approval process. The candidate is a Turkish Islamic foundation which has agreed to also include programming, among other, representing Indian, Pakistani and African American Muslims' religious interests.

Thus, I would respectfully request that the Commissioners consider that the degree of media ownership may, alone, not be determinative of how well they are serving their communities; but rather, what efforts, programs, offerings, partnerships, programs, etc. are made available by and through the media within communities, irrespective of ownership, to allow and provide for more inclusive programming that can meet the needs and interests of communities' viewing publics.

We at GCLRPC believe that your inquiry may very well extend beyond the opportunities for diversity in local religious broadcasting within communities. However, we want you to know of our experience with Hallmark and Time Warner and the very positive feelings we have about the opportunities they have provided to offer diversity in local religious programming in Columbus and surrounding areas.

Thank you.

America Must Have a New Fairness Doctrine: Statement by Jack Burgess
F.C.C. Hearing, Columbus, Ohio March 7, 2007

TO: Commissioners Jonathan Adelstein, Michael Copps, and Robert McDowell

We must have a new Fairness Doctrine. No other media reform will be able to fill the void caused by a lack of fairness in broadcast radio and television. This is not to say that other reforms and efficacious policies are not important or needed. Keeping the internet open and accessible to all, broadening the ownership of broadcast stations, and expanding public access broadcasting are all important parts of a strong, democratic communications matrix for America.

BUT MOST PEOPLE GET MOST OF THEIR NEWS AND OPINIONS---ESPECIALLY ON POLITICAL MATTERS---FROM BROADCAST MEDIA, SO WE MUST WORK TO PROVIDE VARYING POINTS OF VIEW ON RADIO AND TELEVISION. This is even more true of lower income people and senior citizens. The internet and public access broadcasting are not available to all, and are not appealing to all. We must work together to provide real fairness and balance in broadcasting, if our democracy is to succeed.

As you know, the original Fairness Doctrine grew out of the concept imbedded in the Federal Communications Act of 1934 which established that the broadcast airwaves belong to the people, not just to those broadcasters who have the money and equipment to lease the stations. In 1949 the FCC formalized this concept into the Fairness Doctrine, which required radio and television stations to give air time to those who would answer editorial opinions expressed by the stations. It also required that the stations broadcast "in the public interest," giving adequate time to local and national issues, and soliciting public comments on station operation. In actual practice, citizen commentary in answer to programs and editorials was not especially common, but the very existence of the rule seemed to work to hold in check a one-dimensional slant of opinion which might otherwise have been aired by the broadcasters.

In 1987 the Reagan administration's FCC rescinded the Fairness Doctrine and we have seen the result: A flood of largely one-sided opinion shows on radio and a standard of slanted programming and commentary on television. According to those who favored this deregulation, the increasing number of channels on cable and the airwaves would itself provide for diversity and a large measure of fairness. In fact, since ownership of stations and networks is almost solely in the hands of wealthy, majority men, we ordinary citizens, women, and minorities have had little or no input, and essentially no control, over programming, news, and editorial opinion. Studies by Fairness and Accuracy in Reporting (FAIR), for instance, show that while 51% of the population is women, only 5% of the TV stations are owned by women. And while 33% of the population is minorities, only 3% of the stations are owned by minorities. The resultant lack of representation of women and minorities can only be made up by a Fairness Doctrine which requires stations to pay attention to diversity and varying opinions. Again, it is obvious, but needs restating: The ownership and top management of nearly all---if not all---major media is in the hands of wealthy, majority men. The nature of our society and economic system is such that this is likely to be so for the foreseeable future. And, our economic system, absent any intervention, requires that they must be motivated primarily by the doctrine of the maximization of profit. Commercial stations need not so much the coercion of government, as the assistance of government to require fairness and balance. If all stations are required to provide fairness, no one station is put at a commercial disadvantage.

In recent years a few programs of news and commentary have emerged which provide some counterbalance to the general trend of corporate-oriented or so-called conservative radio and television. They include the moderate to liberal programs such as Air America on radio and the Olbermann Report on MSNBC cable. Some may view this as a trend which, if continued, might provide the balance most Americans say they want. Possibly this could be the case, though I doubt it. For one thing, we know that Air America is having problems maintaining its place on the air, due at least in part to corporate-sponsor boycott, which simply highlights the problem in which any programming that steps too far out of line with what is wanted by corporate sponsors tends to get in trouble. We saw that very graphically with the cancellation of the Phil Donahue show during the lead-up to the current war in Iraq. Donahue tended to showcase guests who opposed the war, and even though his ratings were very good, and even though polls showed that a large portion of the American public also opposed the war, he was cancelled. As long as ownership and operation of most networks and stations continues to be in a few corporate, majority male hands, divergent programming and commentary will always be endangered.

Finally, an examination of current media commentary finds that most programs deal in polemics and verbal fireworks, more than in thoughtful commentary. More importantly, there seems to be a bifurcation among viewers in which people tend to watch the commentators with which they agree, and not those with whom they disagree. Thus, even if the programming and commentary overall were relatively even between liberal and conservative points of view, the net result would be a divisiveness in our society. This is a serious problem. Many have lamented the apparent coarsening of discourse and the polarization in our nation, and it seems to me that media programming and commentary are exacerbating that tendency.

A Fairness Doctrine, which would require a program of commentary to allow contrary comments to follow on the same program or station, might discourage some of the extremes, but more importantly would provide the same audience with different sides of the issues being aired. This, in turn, would improve the levels of knowledge and understanding of much of the American audience, which now tends to listen to or watch just one side or the other.

It should be noted that the original communications act, and the subsequent Fairness Doctrine, was adopted before the advent of cable or direct TV, but the logic which created regulation of airwaves could largely be applied to the newer mediums. Part of the rationale for the regulation of the airwaves was that they are limited and so must be used in the public interest. Clearly, there is also a limit to the number of cables or satellites that can be installed, so the FCC should take action to ensure fairness, at least in matters of news and public affairs, with those media as well.

Testimony before 3 members of the Federal Communications Commission

Michael Copps, Robert McDowell, and Jonathan Adelstein.

Thank you very much for coming to Columbus and showing your sincere interest in our concerns.

In Columbus, we had progressive talk radio, including program feeds from Air America and the Jones Network from September 2004 to December 2006. It was carried by the Clear Channel-owned 1230-AM station. Their slogan --which we heard many times every day--was . . .

"Progressive Talk for the REST of US!"

As of 2 months ago, the REST of US were abandoned when Clear Channel pulled the plug on that station's liberal talk format -- substituting a conservative format that duplicates what already exists on the company's other Columbus stations

I am very angry that I no longer have access to Air America and the Jones Network! I was a regular listener.

Clear Channel will probably tell you that progressive talk radio does not draw listeners or sponsors. They're wrong!

Case in Point

In Madison Wisconsin, Clear Channel made an announcement 3 days after the November elections that its local progressive talk station would change its format to sports; sports was already being offered on their other stations in that market.

But . . . Madison people organized, held a mass meeting--I was there—and they gathered many signatures on petitions. Most of all, however, they did Clear Channel's job for them; they went out and found plenty of sponsors!

Clear Channel reversed themselves and the progressive talk radio format remains in Madison. Apparently Clear Channel learned a lesson here: If they wanted to squelch free speech for progressives on Columbus radio waves, they should not give people 6 or 7 weeks advance notice! Therefore, they gave us 2 weeks notice! When they learned there would be a demonstration in Columbus in support of progressive radio on the last day, they pulled the plug a day early! Spite!

When Columbus people went to the local Clear Channel office to deliver petitions, they were told to leave the property immediately or the police would be called. So much for the idea that the public owns the airwaves!

Presentation to FCC Hearing on Media Ownership Columbus Ohio, March 7,2007

My name is Greg Hoke and I'm a teacher. Each semester I teach a new group of students about computer networking and computer programming, Besides being a teacher, I am a resident of Columbus, the Capital of the state which handed victory to George Bush in 2004. I observed first-hand the miscarriage of democracy in which people inside Columbus had to wait hours to vote, while people in the wealthy exurbs, such as Powell and New Albany, had no lines at all. In 2006 I helped MoveOn.org call progressive voters to come to the polls in November. In 2007 I have helped organize citizen lobbying efforts with member of Congress.

On February 9,2007, the Dispatch published an article that Sen. Voinovich had signed a letter opposing the escalation of the ~~war~~ in Iraq. Those of us who want a peaceful resolution in Iraq were delighted to see that our Senator was acting on the mandate of the 2006 election. But when it came to a vote in the Senate about whether to vote on the House resolution against the escalation, George Voinovich switched sides. It's as though there is one view presented to the voters of Ohio, and another view inside the Beltway.

MoveOn organized a rally at George Voinovich's Columbus office. Veterans of Vietnam were to speak and hundreds of letters from Ohio residents were to be delivered to the Senator's staff. The newsworthiness of the event was apparently lost on the TV and radio stations in Columbus. It was not lost on the Cleveland Plain Dealer, nor was it lost on Sen. Voinovich's spokesman Chris Paulitz, who spent almost an hour on the phone with me the day before the Feb. 22nd rally.

Media should cover all sides of the public debate, especially when veterans take the time to meet with their elected officials to urge them to stop supporting a failed foreign policy. These are our airways. They should reflect the interests and concerns of the people of Ohio. We need diverse, local ownership of the media.

Groups rally against Voinovich on war

Posted by Reginald Fields February 22, 2007 15:49PM

About 15 people showed up outside Sen. George Voinovich's Columbus office Thursday for a lunchtime rally against the Republican lawmaker's recent action — or inaction, as they see it — regarding President Bush's call for an Iraq war troop surge.

Voinovich opposed a Democratic-sponsored House resolution against the president's plan and a resolution with similar intent co-sponsored by a fellow Republican senator. Yet he's skeptical of increasing the number of military personnel in Iraq and supports resolutions calling for further debate on this issue and others, including funding for troops.

The small downtown rally was organized by MoveOn.org, Americans Against Escalation in Iraq and PmgreMOTiio.Org. They derided Bush's policy and held up signs with messages for Voinovich: "Iraq Escalation: Wrong Direction," read one, with a picture of a street sign that indicates entry is to the right. Another sign read, "Sen. Voinovich, you are the decider," a play on a Bush comment from last year when the president spoke about war decision-making and uttered the phrase, "I am the decider."

The group first went inside and spoke with members of Voinovich's central Ohio staff, including the regional director for about 30 minutes. The senator was not there.

"They understand he is against the surge but then on Saturday he voted against the House resolution," said Chris Paulitz, a Voinovich spokesman, who admits the senator's voting record on this issue might be confusing but his intent clear. "We tried to explain to them that the reason he voted against the House resolution is because it's kind of a dumbed-down resolution. It stifles debate. He didn't vote for the surge, he voted to continue debating Iraq."

I speak for rules which allow more small business to own/control the air waves, publishing, ^{companies} The Internet.
Two of my beloved air waves are NPR & PBS. They have many solid programs of classical music, of news programs but are in depth thoughtful analysis from local to world-side. I've heard of large conglomerates like Verizon &
AT & T that want to control the Internet. No No!!!
I subscribe to both Verizon & AT & T but I don't want them to control phones or internet across the nation ^{It runs from the} major TV stations ^{because of so much violence}

I see that 5% of TV stations are owned by women. Why not 20 or 50% — That Latino owned stations do not serve the majority of Latino homes — That Afr. Amer. homes are generally NOT served by Afr. Amer. stations. Asian homes not served by Asian stations.

My hope for our country is more access to free speech when there is fair competition versus conglomerate ownership. There is more hope for free open dialogue.

My relative spoke the opposite from me when I spoke with him. He's a businessman & we disagree. He's for pulling air waves to large corp & making lots of money for someone. I totally disagree.
WUSA & WCEB locally are struggling stations but they depend on listeners helping them survive. We help because we treasure their work.

My name is Doug Todd and I am an ordinary citizen who has been active in civic and public affairs for several years. You will hear a lot tonight about WTPG, the Clear Channel AM station, which changed its format away from Progressive Talk recently.

I have my own personal story about WTPG. I tried to buy advertising from WTPG last October to promote a conference on Ohio Voting Rights. The October weekend of this conference was just a few weeks before the November general election. To understand the context of this conference you should know that two major changes in voting laws in Ohio were made effective the first time for last Fall's election. These changes were the expansion of Absentee Voting and new polling place voter ID requirements. There were conflicting court decisions and a great deal of confusion until just days before the polls opened. A major purpose of this Voting Rights Conference was to educate voters and reduce this confusion.

My efforts to buy advertising at WTPG for this conference were met with indifference, condescension and, in my opinion, hostility. I called WTPG about three weeks before the conference believing there was time. The receptionist at the published number for WTPG answered the phone with the call letters of "WTVN" - which is a conservative talk station owned by Clear Channel featuring Rush Limbaugh. No mention was made of WTPG, but when I asked I was told that the number I reached was also for WTPG.

When I reached a sales person they said they would call me back. They did not. After a few days I left at least three messages and voicemails over another two-day period. For days I got no response again. Then finally I got a call back a week later. The sales person who finally called wanted me to buy advertising on WTVN and not WTPG. I told her I only wanted to buy advertising on WTPG and wanted the rates. Finally I was given this information. But it took me nearly two weeks to get it.

During this period I sensed a great reluctance on the part of Clear Channel to sell the advertising I wanted to buy on WTPG. I explored the possibility of PSA's for the voting rights conference and felt the same reluctance. There was absolutely no "public interest" motivation on the part of Clear Channel to provide information or coverage of the critical election issues of the Voting conference. Issues that were vital to all political spectrums in Ohio. The message I got is that Clear Channel is only in Columbus for the money and has no interest in our local community and public affairs. In the end I felt getting spots produced and aired on WTPG would involve considerably greater effort than I had time to give and I looked for other alternatives.

I have owned two small businesses in the past over a period of twenty years. In all that time I never experienced such a cold reception to my interest in buying ads. Small business people are very busy and do not have the time to work through the kind of resistance I experienced from Clear Channel. Had I been a business trying to buy advertising I would have given up on WTPG.

Based on this experience, as well as my general impressions of the commercial radio market in Columbus, I have concluded that the Corporate absentee radio station ownership typified by Clear Channel goes beyond simply ~~being not~~ helpful but is actually negative and hostile toward our community. I urge the FCC to take whatever measures are necessary to curtail and limit absentee media ownership in Columbus. On the other side, I hope the FCC will encourage the development of constructive community broadcasting on a much larger scale than we see today. Thank you.

FCC Town Meeting, March 7, 2007

Good Evening! Thank you, Commissioners Copps, Adelstein and McDowell for listening to our views about further media consolidation.

I represent a grassroots nonprofit organization, Simply Living, whose 800 members hold a vision to "create a compassionate and sustainable world through personal, community and cultural transformation." Our media, which uses our publicly-owned airwaves, powerfully shapes our culture and our world. We want a voice in that media!

To that end, we are one of five original applicants for a low power FM license. Together we jumped through the hoop of becoming a timeshare. On October 5th, 2005, we received our construction permits, although one partner's application had been dismissed without explanation.

In our timeshare agreement, we had identified three tower sites that would bring LPFM to the eastern portions of our county. We are weeks away from being on the airBut already two of our three tower sites have been negated, due to FCC approval for a full-power FM commercial station to move into the Columbus market

Given current FCC rules, our one remaining tower site at any time could be silenced, no matter how much money, time, and sweat equity we invest or how much the community values us. These rules give greater value to for-profit radio than to radio that is fully committed to serving our community.

We call on the FCC to make rules that reflect our cry for localism, for broader community ownership, for a media in which our voices can sing out with our rich cultural diversity and a multitude of viewpoints that reflect our birthrights--citizen engagement and freedom of speech!

Thanks for ~~being~~^{getting} past the Potomac, coming to Columbus, and giving average citizens the chance to address FCC Commissioners.

I strongly support diversity in media and equal access to the Internet, but I have little to add to the comments provided by the other speakers tonight.

I want to speak tonight to something I feel is equally important with the media. I encourage the FCC to take back the airways for US citizens.
Specifically I would like the FCC to require licensed media to provide prime airtime for all certified candidates for elections within a period of time before an election, say 30 to 60 days.
The exact rules can be worked out by interested parties

Already, we are being asked to donate to 2008 presidential candidates, while the first contests are still almost a year away. The reason given for these requests is the high cost of media advertising.

Now, I want elected officials to represent us, the average citizen, not prostitute themselves hunting for bucks. Providing free airtime should reduce the cost of campaigns. Hopefully more viewpoints will be aired and encourage more candidates to run. Maybe it will even start ~~more~~^{real} discussions of issues.

To me this is one of the most important issues that faces our republic today.

I've never run for office, I don't have any intention of running for office, but I'm tired of seeing politicians prostituting themselves so they can buy media time.

Thank you,

Public Hearing in Columbus, Ohio
re: Widening HDTV parameters for e3tv

Gentlemen:

January, 1990 e3tv was presented to the FCC at their Orlando meeting in conjunction with the American Broadcast Association at 3:00 in a 20 minute presentation. It was the first digital system presented. It has resolution of 11,812,500 pixels in the 16:9 aspect form. Its compression, giving a signal that can be transmitted and recorded and stored using HDTV equipment, has byte transmission equal to that for lower resolution HDTV.

I am proposing that consideration be reopened on including e3tv in the allowed broadcast television standard ~~for~~ what became HDTV.

It seemed the purpose of the Commission (FCC) was to recapture some television manufacturing for the United States in the effort to upgrade television standards here in the United States in 1990-3 when the decisions were being reached and made. This has backfired, for the most part, in that facilities established here in the United States to manufacture HDTV by US firms and others are sitting empty while China is supplying over half of the HDTV television sets to the United States and, because this was targeted as an international effort, even fewer US produced sets go to other nations.

Because of the nature of production of e3tv, being done for the most part on web offset presses, developing this in the United States, production can stay here. Since it is not labor intensive, it will compete favorably with imported displays price-wise. Resolution-wise, it will surpass the image quality of HDTV. Signal-wise, viewing e3tv one will get smoother motion and less breakup than HDTV signal has proven to this point.

Presently e3 Enterprises Ip is working to finish development and enter production of the hardware for e3tv and to complete to broadcast readiness the e3tv compression. Its technology is in line with leading edge work here, especially at the Stanford Research Institute, where some of e3's experts are on staff and present work is closely related.

'This move corrects denying the best technology in the mid-1990 FCC decision. e3tv will broaden the use of television monitors in that the 11 million pixel screens can show text and pictures. full double-page images, of up to eight books at one time and still have the creative space for writing one's own document. The 25 segments of the display have resolution of analog television viewing so when monitoring several camera outputs or signals at one time the images are clear and detailed. For security, for science, for medicine, for industry, for sports - the superior resolution of both camera and display improve viewing; broaden the range of uses of the images, still and motion; and favor educational pursuits using television more because there is more to see and read on a screen at one time. Including e3tv will improve the US balance of trade for HDTV.
